IRISH LAND ACT, THE, AND THE ENGLISH LAND QUESTION, 273–293; Landlordism upon its trial in almost every country in Europe, neither a time-honoured nor a popular institution, 273; up to the accession of Elizabeth the land of Ireland was cultivated by the people in common. A glance at the Land Act, 1881, which will probably encourage a more productive cultivation, 274; 'Fixity of Rent' too late in coming to be of much benefit to cultivators, too soon to benefit the non-landed public, 275; land-rents now at their highest, and must gradually decline, 276; in ten years' time the new Land Act will probably be as obsolete as the Act of 1870: the English Land Question "the question of the immediate future," 277; claim of the manufacturing or non-agricultural British public on the land, 278; enormous increase in land-rents caused by the growth of manufactures, 279; land-monopoly handicaps industry through higher land-rents; English land system as iniquitous as the Irish one; State-proprietorship the best solution of the Land Question, 280; confirmatory statements, 281; benefits likely to follow on State-proprietorship, 282; grouping of small farms into large ones, a crying evil of personal proprietorship, 283; evil of the process, 284, 285; evil effects reduced to a minimum by State-proprietorship, 286; Lord Sherbrooke's superficial remedy, 287; and Mr. Bright's delusive one, 287; Mr. Gladstone's preference for repeal of the laws of entail and settlement to "compulsory expropriation," 289, 290; "free-trade" and the raw-cotton monopoly, and American bacon monopoly, 291; warn us against "free-trade in land," 292

Sugar Bounties Question, The, 109–138. Instances of the prevailing ignorance of Colonial affairs, both in England and in the Colonies, 109, 110; capital invested in the West Indies, and in the West Indian Trade, mostly belongs to "residents in England," 111; West Indian export duties are "specially appropriated revenues," 112; West Indies yield us normally three quarters of our own colonial supply—"Perpetual plaint of the planters," 113; increased consumption of sugar followed on abolition of slavery, and of sugar duties, 114; since 1838, sugar has fallen from £50 to £20 a ton, but the Englishman's consumption has increased threefold, 115. West Indian colonies capable of producing sugar cheaper than it can be produced elsewhere, or from other plants, 116; from 1800 to 1840, there was rapid decline in the prosperity of Jamaica, climax reached in the abolition of slavery, and steady recovery since Morant Bay troubles, 117, 118; prosperity spreading fast in Jamaica, seen in the trade having increased 50 per cent. in the last 15 years, 119; exports from Jamaica 1879, and exports of sugar from the West Indies from 1844 to 1879, 120; sugar land in Barbadoes fetches nearly £100 an acre, 121; rise of a new class of planters, 122; adverse conditions still surrounding West Indian sugar industry, 123; prices of sugar for each year from 1858 to 1878, 124; examined, 120; prices affected by increasing populations, war, and commercial depression, 126; question of "bounties" set out, 127; and examined, 128; condition of the industries in the bounty-giving countries, 129; evidence of M. F. Georges and of M. F. Fouquet, 130; evidence from Austria and Belgium, 131; in all countries where bounties are given, sugar industries are in a precarious condition, 132; manufacturing and refining in bond the best method of abolishing bounties, 134; difficulty of all international action, 135; various conferences, 136; English sugar refiners are doing far better than the refiners in bounty-protected States, 137
